Easy moving checklist

You found the right house and signed on the dotted line. Now comes the hard part, right? Not so fast. You can significantly reduce the stress of moving to a new home by carefully planning your move in advance. We've created the ultimate mobile guide to make your move as painless as possible. Bonus: Use our free printable mobile checklist Your transfer to a new home will be easier if you start the planning process two months in advance. From creating a moving collector to backing up your computer files, the goal is to spin the ball. Start. Create a mobile bin or set up a Google Document where you can keep track of everything. If you follow this first step, you will save a lot of time. Print your mobile checklists and put them in the mobile bin. We separated your move activities into eight blocks starting two months before moving in and finishing two weeks after arriving at your home. Determine what else goes into the mobile bin. After you add checklists, you can create sections for items such as documentation, receipts, and contact information. Organize documents to track mobile estimates, final invoices, and other information you get from companies on the go Identify all appointments. We don't refer to medical visits as much as we're to-do lists to connect your utilities, schedule inspections, or enroll your kids in a new school. Track furniture measurements. The last thing you want when you move into your new home is to find that your couch doesn't fit through the door. Measure all your big things to avoid a big mistake on the day of the move. Start packing your first box. It's not time to put all your dishes in mobile boxes, but to put all your vital documents and valuables in one place. You will be able to identify all the important information you do not have and you will never forget which box has all your critical elements. Back up the files. Save your files and photos to the cloud or to an external hard drive. Your new home won't be the same if you lose your wedding photos or your baby's first steps. Identify what kind of move you're making. For example, do you want to do everything yourself, get someone else to do all the work, or find an option in between? Start researching companies on the go. Check out customer reviews, receive at least three quotes, and learn about your budget. You don't have to decide on a company now, but you want to look for your options. Create a room-by-room inventory. It's not as difficult as you think, and it will prevent a huge headache if you have to file a claim for lost, stolen, or damaged goods. Sell or donate Unwanted. This is the perfect time to have a garage sale for the things you've always wanted to get rid of anyway or to finally follow up on your promise to donate to charity. But don't forget some of the large, fragile, and strangely shaped objects that require additional attention (for example, pianos, silky furniture, or snow collections) and perhaps more than your mobile budget. Do a deep cleaning. Not only will cleaning help you organize your belongings, but it can increase the chances of getting your security deposit if you're a renter or make it easier to sell if you're a homeowner. You've spent the last two weeks getting organized. Now it's time to dive a little deeper. From collecting free mobile boxes to photos of your valuables, your goal is to narrow down the on-the-go services and supplies you'll need. Keep researching companies on the go. Narrow the list to three or four options. Start picking up free mobile boxes. Call your local grocery stores and furniture to see if they have free boxes. If we plan ahead, there's a good chance you'll get most of what you need without spending a dime. Label your boxes (for example, Kitchen: Dishes or Office: Books). Don't make the move more expensive and stressful than it should be. We have put together a list of the best discounts and offers on the go. If the company you're thinking of hiring isn't here, that's fine. Just check their website or give them a call and ask if they have discounts. It only takes a minute and could save you a lot of money. Take photos of your valuables. This will not only save your bacon if you need to file a complaint, but you can also use it to cut time off from the decompression process. For example, if you take photos of electronics, you can easily search for which wires go where when you put it all back together. Do small repairs. You looked at that grip missing a face plate long enough. If you knock out some of the simple repairs before you leave, you can increase the chances of getting your security deposit or selling your seat. Plus, karma. Book a storage unit. If you need to use a storage unit because you shipped your items a few weeks in advance or have to wait for people to leave your new home, take the opportunity to book space now. We've been looking for the best self-storage companies to get you started. You're going to sleep in your new home in a month. From choosing a moving company to filling prescriptions, your goal for the next two weeks is to book your transits and collect all remaining supplies. Decide on a company on the go. your budget, receive your quotes and pull the trigger. Remember to keep all important receipts and dates in the mobile bin. If you still have questions, we have a guide to finding a company on the go. Get mobile coverage. With a little luck, nothing will be broken or damaged from the moment you get to the new house. In case, however, you want to opt for moving to protect your belongings. Make travel arrangements. If you're driving the truck on your own, this can mean planning your actual travel route. If someone else is driving, now is the time to book your flight, hotel or rental car. Buy supplies for packaging. I should have been able to pick up quite a few free mobile boxes. Now it's time to buy all the boxes you still need and other mobile supplies. Think about what your new home will look like. We know it sounds a bit scary, but this is an opportunity to cool off and see if there's anything else you should add to your mobile checklist. If you need to buy tents or decorations, this is the time to shop. Tune in to your car. Make sure you're up to date on insurance coverage, mileage checks, and oil changes. Contact your internet providers, TV's and utilities to organize services in your new home. After all, what's the good thing about your new entertainment room if you can't sing with contestants on The Voice because your TV isn't working? Fill in your prescriptions. You don't want to get stuck without medicine in your new home if you need to change doctor or pharmacy. Set up an appointment to schedule your top-ups and start finding a new doctor. T-minus two weeks. From mail forwarding to packing boxes, next week's goal is to update your contact information and finalize the logistics of the day on the go. Change your address. You know you're moving, but not everyone else does. Contact all companies that may need your new address (for example, banks and insurance companies) and arrange to send your mail to the post office. Give everyone your new address. Okay, not all of them. But let family and close friends know where you're moving, especially if you want them to help you unpack your new home. Update or cancel subscriptions and subscriptions. A gym membership is useless if you have to drive 100 miles to get there and grooming will be difficult if you haven't updated your information about the Dollar Shave Club. Confirm important travel dates with all companies through which you have booked services. These should already be listed in the mobile bin. Now you just have to make sure everything is still planned as expected. Start packing. You should complete your inventory, collect and label your boxes, and identify your valuables. Now it's time to pack. Plan your final meals. Remember, almost all your stuff will be in boxes, so bookmark your favorite takeaway menus or grab some frozen items from the grocery store. It's also a good idea some unpacked essentials so you can still do some home cooking. Get a babysitter, a babysitter or both. Make arrangements to entertain your children and pets, or at least off the road, while you load the truck. Update your driver's license, car insurance, and car registration. Plan a party on the go. Invite or beg your family and friends to help you move. (Optional party hats.) You've been down to the last seven days. Days, by collecting all the keys to pack a 24-hour mobile kit, your goal is to have everything ready for the day on the go. Disassemble large furniture. Start cleaning empty rooms. Even if you're not working to get a security deposit, you can make the place more attractive to potential buyers. Pack your bags. Bring everyone in the family a suitcase from which they can live for a few days. Prepare essentials like pajamas, clean socks, and swimsuits for the hotel's pool. Collect all the keys and door openers in the garage. You will have to hand them over to the real estate agent, new owner or next tenants when you move in. Plan a final walk of your new home. Make sure you know how to find things like water heater, switches, and water stop valves. Prepare a 24-hour mobile kit with other essentials besides your clothes. It's a great idea to include some healthy snacks, torches, and phone chargers. Take photos or videos of your empty home. You want to be able to prove that your house was in good condition when you left. Get cash. Have enough money at your fingertips to tip your movers and deal with unexpected needs or emergencies. Clean your new home before you move in. It will save time and the hassle of working around boxes and furniture. Identify decompression priorities. It's pretty hard to unpack everything in just one day, so we recommend planning how to deal with the project in blocks. Finish packing before moving the day. One of the biggest mistakes you can make is trying to pack on the day of loading. Make sure everything is ready before your ers or rental trucks arrive. The moving day has finally arrived! You're in good shape if you've kept a guide moving with a checklist. From waking up on time to taking the sheets on your new bed, the goal is to move into your new home! Don't hit snooze. This is definitely a day when you want to wake up on time. Clear a path. Make sure that the people who help you move can take the boxes from your home to the moving truck without tripping over things. Check the paperwork. If you've hired the translators, be sure to ask the translators for official documents to make sure they're who you think and that all the details of your move are what you expect. Don't get caught up in a scam on the go! Be available to facilitate the loading process. Stay around to answer any questions your ers have. Be sure to provide your contact information and new address, especially if you need to leave while they work. Order pizza (or buy donuts). The best thing you can do for those who help you move is to have packed when they arrive. The second best thing you can do is feed them while they help. Sign the transmittent inventory list. Be sure to ask the translators to give you a copy of their official inventory. This will be crucial in case something disappears during transit and you need to file a complaint. Lead your last walk-through. This is your last chance to see if you've forgotten anything and to make sure the place is clean. It will not come. It's customary to tip your translators. We recommend 15-20% of the total bill for large moves and 5-10% for small moves. We also have specific tips on the dollar amount in our guide to tip your ers. While removals prefer to be paid in cash, you can only claim a tax deduction if you tip by check or credit card. You moved into your new home, but that doesn't mean everything's done. From changing locks to getting to know your neighbors, your goal now is to set the basics and start setting. Go shopping. You must have eaten a lot on the last day or two. Your stomach will thank you if you pick up some family food and put it in the fridge in your new home. Fix the beds and bathroom. Make sure you know where to find sheets, pillowcases and toilet paper. These are some items you don't really want to do without on the first day. Change the locks. You don't know how many people had the keys to your new home before you moved in. Set up home security. You made the effort to bring all your things safely to your new place, now you want to keep it safe. This is also a great time to buy or set up smart home devices. You know your HOA. Be sure to understand policies on pets, lawn care, and monthly fees. Leave a review moving. This is a great opportunity to thank your company on the go for doing a good job or to alert other customers to the hidden challenges you've discovered. Send thank you notes to everyone who helped. There are only a few things left to do! Your goal is to be 100% transferred by the end of the week. Complete unpacking. You'll feel amazing when you unlead your last box! Throw a house opening party. Get rewarded for a job well done and get to know your new neighbors. Make a big impression on your neighbors by giving favors to the opening parties of the house. We've put together a list of 14 affordable items that will amaze your guests, including popcorn jars, pine cone fire starters, and of course, M&Ms. Save your mobile binder. If you ever need to move again, you already have a roadmap for the process. Sit back and relax. You've finished everything on the mobile checklist! Use our printable checklist and make sure your move goes smoothly. A little organization will save a lot of time because you are not surprised by any steps and you have all the supplies you need.
